MY VISION 2030

BY- Yuvika Satija, AISG46 XII-J

Whispers of change in the morning breeze,
Dreams of a world where all hearts seize.

By 2030, I want to see cities in India breathe fresh air again, trees everywhere, rivers that sparkle, and no more thick smoke choking the sky. I imagine streets filled with electric buses and people choosing clean energy without thinking twice. It won't be perfect, but we'll be getting there, step by step.

In schools, no child will be forgotten. Everyone will read and write. Everyone will sing the song of 100% literacy. But more than that, kids will learn things that actually matter in life, like how to handle money, solve problems, and understand the world—not just cram facts for exams. Learning will be fun, fair, and for everyone, no matter where they live.

Health care will reach far and wide, blending smart tech with real human care. Society will feel less divided and more like one big family. The stigma that comes with mental health will no longer exist, we will be inclusive and supportive for all.

I want to play my part of sharing ideas, connecting people, and helping build this future, where India and the world grow together.

Tomorrow's sun will rise bright and true,
A world reborn for me and you.
