

MY VISION OF VIKSIT BHARAT 2030.

- By Manasvini Vats, XII-J

“Viksit Bharat is a nation where no one is too small to dream, and no dream is too big to achieve.”

- Prime Minister Narendra Modi

My vision for 2030 is where every middle-class family won't just survive—they'll thrive. The poor will no longer be called poor—they will live with a basic standard of living that every human deserves. A system should not work only for the benefit of a handful of people, instead it should try to provide everyone with a fair starting point. Fundamental aspects of life such as education, healthcare, a clean environment, and strong infrastructure must be treated not just as rights on paper, but as realities in practice. After all, real progress is measured not by promises, but by action.

Moreover, education should focus on skill development rather than rote learning. We need flexible learning systems that recognize different learning patterns, ensuring no student is left behind.

While economic growth is vital, it should not come at the cost of our environment. Mother Earth provides us with every resource we need, and embracing sustainable practices—like waste reduction, pollution control, and renewable energy—can resolve many of the issues that drain our economy. Focusing on economic growth is the wrong way of looking, instead we should focus on the environment.

At the end of the day, government can launch countless schemes, but without active citizen participation, their impact will remain limited. Until we turn these initiatives into action, the dream of Viksit Bharat will remain just a dream we failed to fulfil.

I would like to conclude by saying that India's vision of Viksit Bharat means developed India and to turn that dream into reality we all need to take a step forward.
