Shyeila was a small girl living in the compact town of Quiyava, but she was not your typical 7–8-year-old girl you'd expect to meet and pamper. She was a curious outsider who owned the terrace and the topmost floor of her family's mansion.

On a dark, stormy night, Shyeila had the boldest idea... She packed her bag, left a note, and cycled to the great place—Toyono, known for its blessings as well as its dangers. Shyeila reached a rocky mountain at 3,000 feet, which she predicted would be prone to a landslide in the next 10 minutes! When she looked up, she saw a group of gangsters dressed in black, head-to-toe. With the clock ticking fast, she knew she had to confront the gangsters to escape. With five minutes left, she pulled out her best karate move, as confident as a black belter—Kansetsu Geri.

Shocked by the girl's swift action, they froze, but that wasn't all. Like an agile cat, she took out slime from her backpack (made for 'just-in-case' situations), shaped it into a surfboard, waited 28 seconds, and then whoosh! She took off from the great Rocky Mountains of Toyono. Climbing down 2,200 feet in only three minutes was tough, so she thought of her one and only idea. With a bottle of vinegar and baking soda, she opened the cap—and voilà! A slippery, foamy surface came to life. Using her scientific knowledge and intuition, with only one-minute left, she took off from the plains of Toyono, admiring her skills as she reached Quiyava on her orange and dark turquoise bicycle, arriving home in the twilight of adventure and exhaustion.
