

Stars to Stardom

Melodrama, moonlight, and maybe fate.

– Shreshtha Karan IX-E, AIS-Gur-46

- When Sunday mornings had the smell of Maggi, the sound of Doordarshan intros, and the chaotic “dhoom-tana-nana-dhoom” in slow motion. When DVDs skipped at the best moments, and we thought Kajol and SRK were the endgame. When there were no reels and Spotify Wrapped, there existed real characters who did not just entertain us but raised us. Ever imagined if the stars in the sky could catch the stars on screen? What if zodiacs had a blockbuster alter ego?

- Aries: Simba (The Lion King)

The untamed, fire-souled roar lying within every child who once tore around a park, fantasizing about being king. Simba's journey has portrayed him as courageous yet heedless, arrogant yet in pain. And just like that, that is Aries's truth — they charge ahead, cry afterward, and battle for what they care about with a kind of ferocity that's both chaotic and enchanting.

- Taurus: Anjali (Kabhi Khushi Kabhie Gham)

They are gentle at the core and totally obstinate on the periphery. Classic softies who'll argue with you for the final laddoo and bawl over nostalgic songs. They love deeply, harbor resentments longer than storylines, and live on the warmth of houses, hugs, and halwa, just like Anjali.

- Gemini: Geet (Jab We Met)

There's a reason why Gemini is governed by Mercury, the gossip planet — the ones with hot, boiling tea. Just like Geet, Geminis talk quicker than they think, jump before they know they've landed, and display their hearts in rainbow-tinted bangles. They're spontaneous, unreliable, but unforgettable as well.

- Cancer: Mia Thermopolis (The Princess Diaries)

Cancer is the gangly teenager who becomes royalty and yet retains her cat. Mia trips, thinks too much, blubbers into her diary, but when she takes a stand, the entire kingdom watches. Sweet and sensitive, emotionally available, Cancers have the sort of unobtrusive strength that's easy to overlook but impossible to ignore.

- Leo: Shah Rukh Khan in Main Hoon Na

All Leos possess the iconic SRK energy — dramatic, emotional, and always bagging hero moments with flawless hair, constantly providing effortless care. They don't live; they perform. But beneath all the flash is a heart as wide as the screen they occupy.

- Virgo: Hermione Granger (Harry Potter)

Virgos are the children who color-code their textbooks and memorize spelling lists as a hobby. Like Hermione, they bear the burden of expectations, diligently correcting what others create in disarray. But do not be fooled — beneath the placidity is a soft revolution waiting to erupt.

- Libra: Rahul (Kuch Kuch Hota Hai)

People pleasers with dimples and decision problems. But they mean well. They're the romancers, the fixers, the ones who'll do Shakespeare and Shah Rukh in the same breath, their emotions often spiraling. They don't just desire love but also beauty.

- Scorpio: Black Widow (Avengers)
When considering that brooding intensity, we cannot help but sense the depth of Natasha's stare. Scarred but grounded, serene yet strategic. Scorpions don't invade your world; they probe it. They're not melodramatic but are merely intolerant of hypocrisy. And beneath that serene reserve? A ferocity of protection that comes across more like a hug held at gunpoint than an actual hug. Trust them with your life, but never your secrets — because believe it or not, they've already got those.
- Sagittarius: Phil Dunphy (Modern Family)
Positive, inquisitive, and a crazy mix of wisdom and dad jokes, Phil Dunphy serves Sagittarius energy incarnate in a polo shirt. The way he's always picking up on something new, despises being confined, and is convinced that everything will be alright in the end. Just like a classic Sag, he's brutally direct, extremely emotional beneath the surface, and perpetually seeking life's next greatest adventure with true wisdom.
- Capricorn: Andy Sachs (The Devil Wears Prada)
Capricorn is that go-getter who begins not knowing and ends up taking over Manhattan. As Andy does, they scale ladders that are constructed of determination, poise, and a dozen all-nighters. They don't always speak much, but they significantly do.
- Aquarius: Ferb (Phineas and Ferb)
Quiet? Yes. Simple? Never. Ferb is the Aquarian who's quietly constructing a spaceship while the rest of the world is arguing over pizza toppings. He's the quiet genius, the eccentric inventor, the one who says little but thinks galaxies forward. Aquarians are blueprinted dreamers, hardcore denim rebels. They don't go with the crowd; instead, they set the trends.
- Pisces: Alizeh (Ae Dil Hai Mushkil)
Alizeh, a dreamer with a fractured laugh. They waltz through agony, believe in souls, and weep during songs you skip. They don't fall for people; they fade into individuals. And when they go, you still sense them in the soundtrack.
- So maybe we're not all meant to be heroes in action films or lead singers in the high school choir, but instead we're just Geets figuring it out, Hermiones holding it together, and Rahuls learning to choose better. And maybe we're all still 11 at heart, living our stories in scenes, waiting for Ilahi to play in the background.
