

HUMAN CAPABILITIES

Everyone has different capabilities. Let's understand this through a different example because I believe

HUMAN CAPABILITY

Pyramid of Human Capabilities that since human existence's appearance is most likely to be the same, people often perceive them as having similar capabilities.

Transforming our capability or skill into an achievement or purpose of life is art. But skill is something everybody has.

Different animals have different shapes, sizes, functions, and different ways of living.

Let some animals on our list be Fish, Monkey, cheetah, and Tortoise.

While fish can swim well in the pond, they cannot jump on a tree like a monkey.

While the cheetah can run as fast as no creature on land could, it cannot protect itself with a self-securing shell as a tortoise does.

We all are gifted, having different skills and different capabilities, but the state of fact changes when it comes to transforming that skill into a career or so-called "purpose."

Those fish who try to become like a monkey fail, never actually realising what they are capable of.

But those fish who swim in life, even when others are busy removing them from their desired path, succeed because they're made for this. They're made for this purpose.

They're made for this so-called transformation.

Exploring isn't bad, but learning what capabilities you are made up of is what really matters.

While exploring, if you're stuck on the same path, remember again that life hasn't ended yet. There's still something waiting for you. There is still a pond waiting for you to swim and succeed in life.

Don't just look in one direction from a tree; you'll only see climbing as an option. Rather, look far ahead, at different ponds waiting for you at the end.
